Mrs. W. B. Meck, who resides at Camptonville, Cal., says her daughter was for several years troubled at times with severe cramps in the stomach, and would be in such agony that it was necessary to call in a physician. Having read about Chamberlam's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy she concluded to try it. She found that it always gave prompt relief. It was seldom necessary to give the second dose. "It has not only saved us lots of worry and time," she says, "but also doctor bill. It is my opinion that every family should have a bottle of this remedy in the house." Why, shouted the impassioned British orator, why is it that the wife of the farmer lacks the happy, contented look to be found on the faces of the bare-headed pensant women of the Continent? Because, said the man near the door, because the bareheaded peasant woman does not have to worry all the time about her hat being on straight.

She is neither short nor tall, Rather what I think you'd call Just the size. And her hands and feet are—well, I'd say ditto and not tell Though her eyes are soft and blue, They have not the brilliant hue Of the sky. Yet when in their depths I look Like a picture in a book There am I.

Not so very small her nose is. Neither are her cheeks like roses, Red and white. And my muse does not embolden Me to call her brown hair golden, Though I might.

Just a village maiden she.

Many ladies that you see Rank above her.

Men have seldom called her pretty I have never thought her witty,
But I love her.
—D. C. Hasbrouck.

HIS WIFE'S CHUM.

He had been married a year and still found that marital happiness was really a tangible thing, not the fanciful vaporings of poetic enthusiasts. He was able to crumble in the dust the highest and strongest arguments brought forward by cynical bachelors that marriage is a failure. But yet, with all his devotion, he was able to appreciate a pretty woman. He kept this appreciation to himself. In a year's time he had learned many valua-ble truths of whose existence he had not even dreamed before. One of these was that it was far better for a married man to keep some things to himself and to observe a religious silence on others. One subject upon which he kept a religious silence was that of praising pretty women in his wife's hearing. When he had married her, he thought his wife the most beautiful creathought his wife the most beautiful creature which the wildest dreams of a lover's fancy could conjure up, but after a year's constant association with her he had been forced to acknowledge to himself that there were others as pretty and at last had decided that some were even prettier, but that none was better or sweeter he never doubted.

One morning at breakfast as his wife, clad in a bewitching gown, was pouring the coffee the smart, white aproned maid came in with the mail, and amid the pile of letters was one upon which his wife seized eagerly and tore open with the un-conventional aid of the butter knife.

"Oh, Jack," she said joyfully as she read on with a smilling face, "Maude is coming! You remember Maude?" He did not remember Maude and said so.

"Oh, yes, you do," his wife replied.
"She was my chum when you came to see me before we were married. She used to plague us by coming in when we wanted to be alone. Don't you remember?"

Jack had a dim recollection of a small girl who used to make herself "too confoundedly numerous," as Jack had once said in a moment of exasperation, but her face he could not call to mind. So he nodded and asked when she was coming.

"Tonight, she says. She does not men-tion the train. There are two, you know. I suppose she will take the 10:35 from Boston, where she wants to do some shopping. I am so glad she is coming. We can have such fun talking over old times, and, oh, lots of things." Every afternoon at 5:30 the train started back from the big, smoky, noisy B. and A. station, and every afternoon at 5:20 Jack entered the last car with his grip and his paper. In the middle of the week the train was seldom crowded, and often Jack found himself entirely alone for most of the journey. This happened to be one of the days, and Jack stretched himself out comfortably and began to read the paper. The main line pulled out in a slow and dignified manner. Jack saw a flash of white fly by the window, and the next moment a charming young woman, with dark brown hair, laughing brown eyes and a jaunty blue and white shirt waist and a red necktie, stood in the door, a and a red neestle, stood in the door, a vision of summer personified. She was so extremely pretty that Jack could not help looking at her again as she came down the aisle. She caught his eye, a half surprised expression flashed over her face, she paused certainly and then deliberately sat down directly opposite Jack. She arranged her blue skirt daintily, looked out of the win-dow and then at Jack, who found himself tealing a surreptitious glance at her from the edge of the paper which he was pre-tending to read. The same little comedy was gone through with again, and this time she smiled slightly, but encouraging-ly, and Jack smiled back. Nay, do not frown. What would you have done under the same circumstances. O stern and mor-

the same circumstances, O stern and mor-al benedicts of a year's standing? At any rate, Jack smiled, and then with malice aforethought, as he very well knew, this pretty girl began to struggle ineffec-tually to raise the car window. Now, this has been the accepted prelude to car filtra-tions since the invention of railroads, and there is good ground for thinking that it may be the reason why car windows almay be the reason why car windows always stick. As soon as Jack saw her attempts he gallantly sprang up and offered to help her. With a charming confusion she accepted, and after a few vicious tugs
the window came up, and Jack sat down beside the charming young woman. He was so exhausted he had to.

"Oh, thank you so much," said she.
"It is so hard to get these windows up.
As I was coming through on the main line

As I was coming through on the main line I tried so hard to get one up and no one offered to help me."

"Have you ever been out this way before?" he asked.

"Oh, yes. I used to live in Boston or about here."
"Yes, indeed I know-er—that is, I—I do not know any one now. Everybody has do not know any one now. Everybody has moved away."

"Now, what the dickens made her blush like that?" thought Jack as the young lady suddenly became intensely interested in the passing landscape. She turned back again after a time, but evidently had great difficulty in meeting her companion's eyes. Every reference to Boston or its vicinity was discouraged with restrained confusion. Jack made some tactful attempts at getting her name, but every one was folled.

"She's a bright girl," said Jack to himself, "but what makes her want to giggle all the time?"

all the time?"

The train approached Alton Centre, and the young lady made preparations to leave the train, and while it pulled into the station Jack carried her bag to the door and wished her a goodby. She turned as if to speak to him and then ran down the steps.

"She is a mighty pretty girl," mused Jack as he resumed his seat. "But what—wonder if I'd better say anything to Edith about it. No, I won't—no need of it." And he began to read his paper.

His wife met him at the gate, and her face wore a look of disappointment.

"Mande is not coming today, Jack," she said. "She wrote me she was going te stop off to see a friend and come on tomorrow on the afternoon train. Isn't it mean, after all my preparations too?"

Jack thought it was, and the subject Jack thought it was, and the subject dropped. In the evening they went over to the Van Pluys' to play whist, and Edith and Mr. Van Pluys beat Jack and Mrs. Van Pluys, much to Edith's delight and Jack's chagrin, for if there was one thing on which Jack prided himself it was his whist and his famous combination play of the king second hand which had never failed of its object, but did fail signally that night.

night.

For some unaccountable reason the next For some unaccountable reason the next day did not pass as well for Jack in the city. Everything seemed to go wrong. His typewriter spoiled two briefs when they were almost done, and he dropped his big inkstand and spilled all of the ink on the pretty rug which he and Edith had selected to make the office look more cheery. When it came time for him to go to the station, he was glad and sank withto the station, he was glad and sank within his accustomed seat with a sigh of relief. He remembered the affair of the day before and wished that he had told Edith and compromised with himself by deciding to tell her when he reached home. The monotonous rattle of clicking cars jarred upon him, and he could not read. When the train stopped at West Alton, his temper had not improved materially, and when he ran into a fat man with two grips he did not even beg the fat man's pardon, although he knew that it was his own fault, but muttered savagely something about people not looking where they were

Edith did not meet him at the gate as usual, and that irritated him more. As he neared the little porch he heard the sound of animated voices. One was Edith's. The other sounded strangely familiar. Where had he heard it before? He racked the best but and described to be the best of the sounder of the strangely familiar. his brain, but could not determine. As he opened the door to the cool, darkened sitting room Edith met him. "Maude has come, Jack," she said and dragged him into the room where, seated on the divan with the big cushions, was a white form which his eyes, unaccustomed to the dimness of the room, could not make

"Maude, this is my husband, Jack," said Edith. "You remember Jack?"
"I believe that we have had the pleasure of meeting more recently, Mr. Strong," said Maude, with a roguish smile.

"Er—ah, yes, yes, of course," he managed to gasp. "Delighted"— And he sank down upon the nearest chair with the perspiration standing out upon his forehead. His wife stood like a statue of ice and looked from Maude, who was smilingly self possessed, to Jack, who looked like a melting molasses candy image. "'I do not quite understand," she began.

Maude said nothing, but kept her calm, reguish smile. Edith turned to Jack and almost caught him in the act of making a wild appealing gesture toward Maude. He wilted further. "John," said Edith—and when she said

"John" she meant what she said, and Jack knew it-"John, what does this "Er—my dear—it means I—the fact is —oh, dash it—I—I saw her yesterday in the car. That is what it means." And Jack blurted it out in a voice which was a ombination of a groan and a shout. "Met her in the car? Well, I see no "Met her in the car? Well, I see no reason why you should be so confused about it." Edith had become very haughty.

Jack said nothing. He was swearing—he was swearing to himself. Maude saw that it had gone far enough, and that it was time for her to speak.

"Come, Edith," she said, "I'll confess."

When I entered the car yesterday afternoon, I recognized your husband at once and was going to speak to him, but I saw that he did not recognize me. I—well, I do not know why I did it, but you know my fault is liking fun and practical jokes and all that, and I just thought that it would be fun to play a trick on him and flirt with him and then tell you all about it. He kindly helped me''—here she smiled at Jack, who cursed mentally—"to raise the window, and then he talked very nicely to me. And I nearly died with laughing and having to keep it to myself. When I left the train at Alton, I intended to tell him all about it, but the thought of seeme today kept me from it. That's all, Edith. It was just one of my awful practical jokes. Forgive me, dear, but really

I could not help it." Jack had straightened up when she be-gan her tale, and when she had finished added emphatically: "Yes, by George, that's all, Edith. I was going to tell you all about it tonight myself."

Edith looked from one to the other doubtfully, and when she thought of the unutterable woe depicted upon the face of poor Jack and his bad quarter of an hour sense of humor came to her, and she was forced to smile and was joined by Maude, who had had great difficulty keep-ing her face straight for the last 15 minutes, and by Jack, upon whom the smile of tees, and by Jack, upon whom the smile of Edith had produced a reaction. They all laughed loudly and long, and Edith kissed Maude, and then everybody went into one of those delightful little dinners for which the Strongs are so justly famous.

But that night, after Maude had gone to her room and Jack was smoking his last pipe, Edith looked up from her book and gazed at Jack long and earnestly. He met her gaze with a fond smile.

"Jack Moule is a desire the length she?" 'Jack, Maude is a dear girl, isn't she?"

"Why, yes, of course she is."
"She's an old friend of mine, too, and I "She's an old friend of mine, too, and I think a great deal of her. She and I went to school together. She was always so jolly and so fond of practical jokes and that sort of thing, you know."

She paused and fingered the cover of her book. She was deep in thought.

"Jack, don't you think that people who are that way carry things a little too far sometimes?"

And Jack smiled .- Rochester Post-Ex-

Spiders In History.

Spiders have played a greater part in Spiders have played a greater part in history than most people are aware of. Everybody knows how the perseverance of a spider encouraged Robert Bruce to regain his kingdom of Scotland, but not so many know that according to Jewish tradition a spider saved David's life. Saul was hunting for him, and his soldiers approached a cave where David was hidden. Shortly before, however, a spider had spun her web at the mouth of the cave, and the soldiers, taking it for granted that if he soldiers, taking it for granted that if he had taken refuge in the cave he must have broken the web, departed, forgetting the web might have been spun after as well

A spider saved the life of the grandun-ele of the German emperor. Frederick William was king of Prussis, and an at-William was king of Prussia, and an attempt was made to poison him in a cup of chocolate. By chance a spider fell into the cup, and for this reason the monarch gave the chocolate to a dog, who immediately died. Inquiry was made, with the result that the cook was hanged, and a large spider wrought in gold now decorates one of the chief rooms of the Winter palace at Potsdam in memory of the king's escape.

seem less. Nothing will ever completely relieve but a radical cure. The effects of such disorders are not limited to mere local discomforts but extend over the whole body. Perhaps the nerves are most affected, and this in turn disturbs the digestion. After that there is no telling what form the trouble may take. With irritable nerves and poor digestion, a woman is on the straight road to the grave. Women are notoriously negligent in matters pertaining to their health. Too many of them understand too little about their own physical make-up. They do not understand their possibilities or their limitations, and they do not know enough about themselves to know when a symptom is really serious and when it is not. This naturally makes them overlook the plainest of danger signals. The start of everything is simple. The start of so-called "female complaints" may be a very slight thing indeed. It may be that in the beginning some small hygienic measures would stop it. When the trouble becomes worse, it is harder to cure, but still it can be cured. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription will positively cure any trouble of this character. It may be absolutely relied upon. It affords immediate and lasting relief to a woman whose natural modesty has kept her from consulting physicians.

The whole story of the "Favorite Prescription," and what it has done for thousands of women is told in Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser. This is a 1008 page book, profusely illustrated, written in plain language for the use of every-day people, and gives in a clear and lucid way an immense amount of valuable information about health and medicine. It will be sent free on receipt of 21 one-cent stamps to cover cost of mailing only.
